

Nina Elisabeth

I've always loved making things; it's just who I am. That love for creating led me to the B Fashion Academy and later the Master Tailor program in Amsterdam, where I learned the technical side of turning ideas into real, well-made pieces.

After graduating, I started my own label: Nina Elisabeth (Elisabeth is my middle name). It's the place where creativity, craftsmanship and a conscious way of working with clothing all come together.

From old fabrics to new designs

A lot of clothes get thrown away for the smallest reasons: a tiny hole, a stain, a tear. But to me, that's where things start to get interesting.

I began asking friends and family for their old garments, just to see what I could do with them. Before I knew it, my studio shelves were stacked with denim, and a rack full of blazers was waiting for a second life.

Every creation tells its own story

Those pieces now form the base of everything I make. Each design starts with the materials I have, shaped by what they bring to the table. Because I work with different fabrics every time, no two items are ever the same.

That's how both my collections and custom designs come to life, made for people who want something that truly feels like them.

Collections and custom pieces

Whether it's a piece from my collection or a personal design made just for you, everything at Nina Elisabeth is created with care, character and intention. Each item is made to last, to be worn often, and to reflect the person who wears it.
